Third Elevator Lab round: RBI Innovation Board satisfied with proofs of concept

Last Thursday, the six participants in the third round of the Fintech Partnership Program Elevator Lab presented the results of their proofs of concept to the Innovation Board of Raiffeisen Bank International (RBI). The Innovation Board was very satisfied with these proofs of concept.

One novelty compared to the first two rounds of Elevator Lab was a cross-industries cooperation with Kapsch TrafficCom and the Israeli Fintech Nayax in the area of Payments and Transaction Processing für Mobility Services. "The initial tests were promising, which is why we decided to deepen the cooperation. As a next step we would like to further develop the results with available customer requirements," explained Georg Kapsch, CEO of Kapsch TrafficCom.

"I am confident that the third round will once again result in collaborations which will bring added value to our customers," said Johann Strobl, CEO of RBI. So far, twelve partnerships have already emerged from Elevator Lab, the largest program of its kind in Central and Eastern Europe (CEE). "Needless to say, Elevator Lab will enter its fourth round this year. In the next round, there will be a stronger focus on the areas where we are looking for pioneering solutions for our customers. And our subsidiary banks in CEE will play a greater role," added Strobl.
